

Biotech & Tech

Tech Talk: NetLingo can translate confusing Internet terminology

LARRY FIORINO
The Daily Record
October 17, 2008

It comes as no surprise that with the development of the Internet and digital applications, a new language has emerged to describe online activities, the exchange of information, and the processes that make each possible.

The words and phrases that accompany the language can be confusing to an Internet newbie or even to the savviest of online users.

Consequently, NetLingo (www.netlingo.com) recognized the need for an online dictionary to serve as a reference for Internet users. In 1994, creator Erin Jansen along with a partner founded the online dictionary to help users decode unfamiliar words, concepts and acronyms.

Now, NetLingo is comprised of thousands of definitions that explain common acronyms and text message shorthand. Read more here...

<http://www.mddailyrecord.com/article.cfm?id=149119&type=Daily>